Commuting is a part of life

For 3-4 days each week,
the office is the destination for many.

NEXT STOP: ECN

8 in 10
office workers use public transport with an average commute time of 44 mins.

Those with a short (<20 min) commute are 2X more positive (HINT: less than 10% have a short commute).

Is our “commuting mood” different to our “office mood”?

Does reaching people when they're in a positive mood boost the likelihood they notice and believe advertising on ECN screens?

Mood matters.

Previous research highlights:

- Brand preference is higher when people are in a positive mood (Batra 1990)
- Happier audiences are more likely to recall advertising (Bronner 2007)
- Positive audiences are more likely to buy an advertised product (Hearst UK 2019)

We asked London office commuters about their mood and this is what we discovered...

Our office mood is a very different shade to our commuting mood.

ACTION TAKEN HAVING SEEN ADVERTISING

Source: MTM x ECN: Power of the Office Survey. B3a: We now want you to think about any action you may have take as a result of seeing advertising on the digital screens from ECN. Which, if any, of the following actions have you done as a result of seeing advertising on these screens?
 Base: Those who saw advertising on an ECN screen (471)

And if the advertising message is contextually relevant, office commuters will respond positively towards brand or performance ads.

NEXT STOP: ECN

For brands wanting to reach commuters during their working day, ECN delivers a more receptive audience

- 1. The office mood is more positive, alert and energetic.
- 2. Which increases the likelihood advertising is recognised and responded to.
- 3. The office mood colours perception, with advertising seen on ECN seen as more trustworthy, informative and relevant.
